

07. PRACTICE : MIRROR PRACTITIONER

DURATION : 05:17

STUDY SHEET

COURSE SUMMARY

In this video, the therapist learns to act as a mirror for their patients, helping them to feel their own weight and electromagnetic level through breathing and meditation techniques. The importance of gravity, electromagnetism, and light in the process of energetic transformation is highlighted, with an emphasis on observing sensations and becoming aware of surrounding energies. The practitioner explores the roles of the adrenal and thyroid glands while guiding the patient towards a state of trust and awareness, thus allowing for a deeper understanding of their healing process.

PRACTICE OF THE MIRROR PRACTITIONER

The therapist acts as a mirror to the patient, allowing them to feel their own heaviness and electromagnetic level. At the atomic level, this manifests as a vibration felt as a sensation. It is essential to allow this vibratory state to settle and to note, without thinking, the voids and the fulls.

To establish heaviness, it is recommended to breathe into the hara, focusing on abdominal breathing. This can generate a sensation of warmth and allow one to experience the levels of earth and air, i.e., the lithosphere and the atmosphere.

Focus on the adrenals and the thyroid. Gravity expresses the balance between these two glands. It can stabilise a person in their function. It is also important to focus on the individual's electromagnetic level, as the body's electricity is linked to the thyroid, which becomes electrically functional at the age of 7 years.

The word is carried, which means the thyroid electrifies the word. Observe what you perceive. A high electromagnetic level can indicate an excess of mentality, leading to a tendency to be overly mental.

Now focus on the formless level, A-TOMOS. This energetic level must be explored outside of your will. Simply be confident and aware. Direct your attention to the person's light, observing how the cosmic flow enters the body and radiates within. Light reflects man in his function. Allow this light to open.

This outer, almost cosmic, level contains an energy that simultaneously transforms energy. One could say that this touches upon the soul and the earth, in the sense of matter. Light creates the etheric body through radiation that expresses itself in the formation of psycho-energetic centres. Etheric condensation gives rise to the physical body, which can undergo transformation through specific energy.

Two energies are often overlooked: the sound that passes through you and the silence that accompanies it. The therapist who understands these energies becomes the mirror of the other. It is crucial to be a transparent mirror. One cannot be the guide on another's path, but one can help them in their formation and transformation through awareness of their functional energetic plan.

This means that any manipulation can be a pure energetic transformation, provided it acts on the correct plane. The therapist uses their own body and consciousness to help the other find their way.

In conclusion, gravity grounds man in the earth, electromagnetism places him in his body, the atomic level integrates him into his energy, and light places him in his function. Whenever a person consults on a physical plane, it is possible to perform this aspecific work, which leads back to the creative plan, but always outside of your will.

When you listen to others, what you perceive of them can be a reflection of yourself or its opposite, but rarely the reality that represents the movement of energy, always changing. It's a bit like a meditation.

Therapists must allow a word, a look, or a gesture to come to them, without will, to offer to the other with complete simplicity. This can be the word, gesture, or look that the other needs. Welcome this as a cosmic sentence, allowing something greater to come to you.
