

27. MEDITATION AND OBSTACLES

DURATION : 02:48

STUDY SHEET

COURSE SUMMARY

In this captivating video, the teacher addresses common meditation challenges, including laziness and forgetting essential methodologies. By highlighting the importance of authentic motivation that encompasses others, he proposes antidotes such as attention and mindfulness to overcome these obstacles. Through a powerful metaphor comparing the mind to a candle, he invites us to stabilise our concentration, thereby revealing a hidden potential for deep insight. This session provides practical insights into developing mental clarity, making meditation accessible and enriching for everyone.

MEDITATION AND OBSTACLES

I am aware that I breathe in, I am aware that I breathe out. I become aware of my breath and my body. I relax my body and generate a feeling of joy and happiness in the present. I become aware of my pain, I embrace it and I take care of it.

It is important to have good motivation when you start meditating. Your mind will present you with obstacles. The first obstacle is laziness. This can manifest as active laziness, where you engage in many activities, except meditation. Another aspect of laziness is giving up, where you tell yourself that meditation is not for you after all. The antidote to this is to find a just motivation, which must be not only for yourself, but also for others.

The second obstacle you will encounter is forgetting the methodology of meditation. At first, it is easy to get lost in your thoughts. I myself have experienced moments where I thought I was meditating, but I ended up daydreaming. Meditation is a training of the mind, a discovery of its own functioning.

It is normal not to always feel good while meditating. The important thing is to learn to recognise and train your mind. The antidote here is attention and mindfulness. This allows you to discover the energy of your mind, concentration, which will gradually open you to a deep insight into things.

You must progress gradually. Imagine entering a space where secrets are hidden behind the walls. You enter with a candle, which represents your mind. At first, the candle flame flickers, which means there is no real luminosity. However, through the practice of meditation, you learn to stabilise this flame. A luminous clarity then appears in your mind.

This clarity leads you to deep insight. It is essential to learn to stabilise your mind, as this requires stabilisation work. You must develop this clarity of mind through the energy of mindfulness, concentration and deep insight. With practice, everyone can access this.